The Homes of the Poor.

Oh! the homes we give the poor! In the alleys damp and grim, Where all noisome vapore swim. In the cellar-caves that drink Poison from the sewer and sink. Are the homes we give the poor,

See the bornes we give the poor; Piled to weary, dangerous beights. Chilled above by wind and snow. While the fire-fiends lurk below-See the homes we give the poor.

Are they homes we we give the poor? Danger sits by every gate, Pain and misery round them wait. Ghostly tenants put we in. Beath, disease, and shome and sin-Homes they are not for the poor!

Have we no homes for the poor! Hold we cardle so cramped and bound Piace for these cannot be found! Do our homes on wide expand That they rover all the fand! Lave we no homes for the poor!

Near usever are the poor; They are mearer than we think: We but stand open the brink Whence we push them, and their f. H. Saches the mansion and the half We are very hear the poor.

Ask we how to bless the poor! Build them houses not unmeet To be trod by human feet-Give them homes; and blessings thus Shall run swift from them to us-2 . I'rom the homes we give the poor.
